Category:MacOS antivirus software Category:Antivirus software for Linux that it's very rare that children get really injured. As for the spiked helmet, I couldn't tell you what kind of helmet a polo player would wear. A polo player or someone with a riding jacket might wear it. Of course, most of them wear hockey helmets because they don't tend to fall off. I have a feeling that probably means that it wouldn't hurt him. Maybe a little, but not enough to do serious damage. What about what I asked you? "At what age do you think it's possible to train an animal to wear a spiked helmet?" As I said before, it would be too dangerous. You wouldn't want to do it at all. But once you get a horse that will let you, it's definitely possible. However, with the right training and a really good rider, I think it's possible. It's good that the brain is protected from bumps and blows and pressure and all the rest of it, but to say "the average kid can get hurt if it's not a very good helmet" is kind of silly. Good helmets help tremendously, but they're not a sure thing. The whole thing about a baby being at risk is really overblown. Unless it's a trauma that is serious, there's little risk. With a hockey helmet, yes. They are designed to protect the head. When you're playing polo, the purpose is to protect the body. It's a sport in which the horse can become injured very easily. It's a
